Computer 'Virus' Destroys U.S. Data

NEW YORK (NYT) — Information stored on personal computers at the Environmental Protection Agency, NASA and several other government agencies has been destroyed by a computer program designed to sabotage a private computer company in Texas.

sabotage a private companie company in Texas.

It is not known whether the rogue program, which damaged files over a five-month period beginning in January, was deliberately introduced to government agencies or brought in accidentally, but officials at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration have asked the FBI to enter the case.

Although damage to government data was limited, files were de-stroyed, projects were delayed, and hundreds of hours were spent tracking the electronic culprit throughout U.S. agencies. The programcalled the "scores virus," is one of at least 40 such computer viruses now identified in the United States. Viruses are designed to conceal their presence on a disk and to repeatedly replicate themselves onto other disks and into the memory banks of computers. The scores virus was designed to sabotage programs at Electronic Data Systems of Dallas, according to a company spokesman. The program did little damage the Dallas company, he said. But it has caused havoc on thousands of personal computers across the United States.

Drug Seizure Is a Record for Sweden

STOCKHOLM (AP) - Swedish customs agents have made their biggest narcotics seizure on record, the head of Sweden's narcotics squad said Monday.

Two Swedish and three Dutch citizens were arrested and charged with drug offenses, Mr. Sturesson said. He said the Dutch suspects were among the leaders of one of the biggest drug syndicates in Holland.

U.S. and Soviet INF Inspections Start

FRANKFURT (AP) - A group of 19 Soviet missile specialists arrived in Frankfurt on Monday to verify compliance in West Germany with the INF Treaty scrapping intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Another group of Soviet specialists arrived in the United States last week, while U.S. inspectors went to the Soviet Union. The Americans will verify destruction of 1,800 missiles and check on about 3,200 related components, including storage and transport missile containers and special hauling vehicles.

The so-called "baseline inspections" are the first type of inspection to be made under the INF Treaty. Each side has given information to their other about how many treaty-related items there are and where they are located. The baseline inspection is made to establish a guide, called a baseline," comparing what is on paper with what is actually there,

Schiphol Airport Tightens Security

AMSTERDAM (Reuters) -- Amsterdam's Schiphol airport is controlling temporary workers' access to sensitive areas after a television program exposed security weaknesses that could be used for terrorist attacks, a Schiphol spokesman said Monday.

A program broadcast on Dutch television on Sunday showed how a 23-ar-old student, employed on a temporary contract, shifted suitcases in hiphol's luggage-handling area without being stopped by security staff. The student used a television camera hidden in a plastic bag to record his

The broadcast showed how temporary workers received security clearance without thorough screening and said this could easily be used by terrorists to smuggle explosives or weapons aboard aircraft. Schiphol

Record prize of $13,890,588.80—all CASH—TAX FREE!*

NOW YOU CAN WIN BIG

For years Canadians have been striking it rich in Lotto 6/49-Canada's most popular lottery. In fact, last year Lotto 6/49 paid out over $500 Million dollars in prizes! Almost every week new millionaires are being made by playing this fantastic game. The jackpots (1st prize) regularly surpass $10,000,000 per draw and have gone as high as $13,890,588. That record prize was won by Lillian and Stewart Kelly, pictured below, and still stands as one of the world's largest all-cash lottery prizes every awarded.

Now, thanks to Canadian Overseas Marketing's unique subscription service, you too have the chance to win a multi-million dollar prize.

MULTI-MILLION DOLLAR PRIZES

Here are some examples of the fantastic jackpots being awarded by Lotto 6/49:

Lilhan and Stewart Kelly -$13,890,588.80 Mohamed and Nurahi Samji -$11.066.864.20 Ron and Val Taylor -$10,372,326.70 -$10,191,804.60 Carrie and Derek Stockley

-$ 7,789.787.60 Doug and Loraine Clark -5 7.059.893.70 And that's just for first prize...there are many SMillions more paid out in subsidiary prizes. With five prize categories in all and thousands of

prizes won in every draw, it's as if you can't miss! GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOTTERY

Lotto 6/49 is an official lottery operated by the ten Provincial Governments of Canada. It's called Lotto 6/49 because six winning numbers from a total of forty-nine are selected each draw. If the six numbers chosen match the six numbers you are playing, you win the jackpot. In addition to the six regular winning numbers chosen, there's one additional number drawn called the "honus number". If you have any five of the six regular winning numbers correct plus the bonus number, you win second prize. Any five, four, or three of the regular winning numbers correct wins you third, fourth, or fifth prize respectively. There's a new draw twice each week (on Wednesday and Saturday), every week of the year. The jackpot is guaranteed to be not less than $1 Million dollars in each draw, And if the jackpot is not won in the current draw, that prize money is carried over and added to the jackpot for the next draw, growing until it's won!

YOU PICK YOUR OWN NUMBERS

Besides the enormous prizes to be won, the best thing about Lotto 6/49 is that you pick your own numbers. So, instead of just buying a ticket. you really do play this lottery. Many people feel they have certain personal lucky numbers or numbers that have a special significance to them, such as birthdays or anniversaries, Still others look for statistical patterns in the numbers selected. But whatever method you use, you'll find it much more exciting to play the lottery that lets you enter your own numbers.

Moreover, the size of a car bomb that exploded Saturday outside a Johannesburg rugby stadium, kill-ing two persons and injuring 67 others, suggests to police officials that hard-liners in the military wing of the ANC have prevailed over the group's political leaders in a debate over whether to escalate attacks against civilians.

The ANC has not claimed responsibility for Saturday's blast, but has been blamed by a number of South African officials, including the police commissioner, General Hennie de Witt, and the law and order minister, Adriaan Vlok, who called the bombing a "barbaric deed of the ANC."

The police said that more than 220 pounds (100 kilograms) of explosives were packed in the car that exploded outside the Ellis Park sta-guerrilla training camps in Angola. Another major event was a 1985 conference in Zambia, where ANC militants forced through an amendment to the official policy of attacking only police and military targets. The militants declared that it was becoming increasingly diffi-cult to distinguish between "hard", and "soft" targets, and that civilian casualties, while regrettable, were

In addition, senior police officials maintain, the current wave of terror attacks appears to be a result of growing frustration within the ANC over failed attacks and increasing losses within the guerrilla ranks, both in South Africa and in neighboring black-ruled states. According to government figures, 63 ANC guerrillas have been killed and 592 captured during the last 18 months.

Michael Hough, director of the Institute for Strategic Studies at the University of Pretoria, cited a paradox between the escalation of bombings and the ANC's inten-tion, declared at last year's meeting with liberal South African whites in Dakar, Senegal, to seek more white support in South Africa.

"It's a strange duality," Mr. Hough said. "On the one hand, they're wooing whites and on the other they are blowing them up. This type of campaign is going to turn out to be totally negative in terms of gaining white sympathy.

The Citizen, a Johannesburg daily newspaper that usually reflects government thinking, said Monday that "top South African government sources" were predicting retaliation against the ANC for Saturday's bombing.

The state broadcasting corpora-tion commented that "those who perpetrate acts of terrorism must be systematically hunted and dealt with wherever they are." "Nor can they be allowed to

Incident Came as Iran Was Testing New Policy

New York Times Service PARIS - The downing of an enthusiasm for the war and a de-

They added that the incident would hamper an effort by the parliamentary speaker. Hashemi Rafsanjani, to steer the country toward a possible end to the Gulf War and aproved foreign relations.

"It was bad timing," said Shah-

Mr. Rafsanjani, who is also com-mander in chief of Iran's armed forces, said that the country would embark on a policy to make friends abroad and unify its armed forces command after several defeats.

This was the first open criticism of leadership policies and an at-tempt by Mr. Rafsanjani to prevail over other internal forces, including power blocs led by Ahmad Khomeini, son of the country's supreme leader, and Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, heir apparent

Tragedy in the Gulf

It is a tragedy that an Iranian civilian surliner was shot down yesterday in the Gulf, and President Reagan was right to express immediately America's regret at the appalling loss of life. No political differences which lie between the United States and Iran will keep Americans from giving their sympathy for this terrible event.

More needs to be known about what happened. The account offered by American authorities portrays a conscientious navy skipper trying desperately to warn off an ominously approaching aircraft during a surface naval engagement that was already under way. This is one of the most sophisticated ships in the U.S. Navy, and its failure or inability to distinguish between the Airbus it actually was and the Iranian F-14 the Vincennes thought it was obviously requires some inquiry and explaining. Conditions in the Strait of Hormuz on Sunday constituted precisely the sort of difficult, dangerous and unpredictable combat environment that the navy's advanced systems are intended to meet.

Immediately, and perhaps inevitably,

Union's downing of a South Korean air-liner in 1983. Admiral William Crowe, we think, had it straight when he observed on Sunday that, unlike the Iranian Airbus, the Korean airliner was not flying into a combat zone and into an actual battle, and the Korean plane was not warned repeatedly before it was attacked.

With another country, even an adversary, the United States might be reasonably sure after an incident of this sort that the response would be angry and emotional but finally restrained. The Iranian revolution, however, has produced one sequence after another in which untoward events become the stuff of fierce domestic political maneuvering, with a dark effect on foreign relations. The United States should be thinking of further ways to demonstrate to Iran that the downing of the plane was in fact an accident, and that the best response to it is a concerted new push to stop the war, which, while it continues, contains too many possibilities for further tragedies.

ty offered an economic parallel to the breathtaking displays of political upheaval. His passionate words reflect the deep frustrations of Mikhail Gorbachev and his allies for economic change. By their own admission, the first round of reforms has failed.

The reformers are aiming to decentralize economic decisions and create competitive markets. Yet six months into the full-scale effort at radical change, Soviet consumers face longer lines and more empty shelves than ever. Mr. Gorbachev blames his failure on an entranched bureaucracy, loath to relinquish power. He is undoubtedly correct that central planners oppose his reforms. But the problem runs deeper. In Russia's deeply conservative culture, people traditionally have seen great risk in change. That caution has been reinforced by the sense that the reformers lack clear goals and credible plans.

Paradoxically, the best and perhaps the only reason to be optimistic lies in the desperation of the Soviet elite. Mr. Gorbachev's opponents know that economic stagnation would ensure that the Soviet Union became a second-rate power and would threaten their political legitimacy.

The core of the economic reform is the creation of markets for many goods in which prices are determined by costs, the mix of output is determined by supply and demand and individual effort is rewarded with income and status. The transition was set to begin in January. Enterprises which account for 60 percent of nonmilitary production gained freedom to operate without day-to-day interference from Moscow.

This switch did take place on paper. But, not surprisingly, most enterprise managers are not eager to volunteer as guinea pigs in an experiment which has only been vaguely outlined, and most bureaucrats are not about to force them. Contradictions abound. Factories with obsolete equipment are supposed to compete for contracts with more modern ones. Wholesale markets are supposed to spring up spontaneously, but buyers and sellers are not yet allowed to set prices. In the bsence of flourishing wholesale markets, the ministries in Moscow remain the only effective brokers. Even the most enterprising enterprises remain dependent on ministries for scarce supplies and for markets in goods which may or may not be in demand.

Mr. Gorbachev has responded to contradiction and uncertainty by raising the volume of public exhortation and by pushing the pace of change where resistance is poorly organized. He plans to accelerate the transition to quasi-private agriculture, in which most farmers would become sharecroppers on state land. He is encouraging small cooperatives to fill the gaps in consumer services and light industry. And he is even hinting at allowing the prices of basic consumer goods to be determined by the free market, ending the practice of rationing scarce staples like meat with long lines. But these are largely diversions. The fate of the larger reform turns on the integration of the huge state enterprises, which make everything from tractors to televisions, into a market-based economy. Mr. Gorbachev probably understands this and is probably mustering all the political and bureaucratic power he can to bulldoze enterprises out of their comfortable ruts. But the initial effort has got nowhere, leading most observers to be skeptical about his chances.

Such skepticism fails to take account of the harsh reality faced by the leadership. If the current course is not soon altered, the Soviet military will not be able to match the West in weapons, and ordinary citizens will never have the cars and clothes and housing that Westerners take for granted.

The threat of such a future provides no insights on how reforms might work or be enlarged. Nor does it clarify the interests of the Western alliance in the success of the reforms. But the certain bleakness of a future without reform does suggest that Mr. Gorbachev and his successors have little

Airbus: A Different Affair

At least the United States didn't stonewall. It admitted its responsibility.

The tragedy inevitably brings to mind the destruction of the South Korean Boeing in August 1983, but there are big differences. The South Korean airliner was shot down in peacetime; the Soviet Air Force had many ways of identifying it and ending its intrusion over Siberian territory by more civilized means. The Airbus affair was not like that at all. The plane was shot down over a particularly dangerous sector after an American helicopter was attacked by Iranian gumboats. It was flying low for a plane of its type and heading toward the cruiser Vincennes; it was registered by radar as a lighter-bomber and therefore destroyed.

These particulars do not excuse the hasty reaction by a U.S. Navy that has been on edge since the loss of one of its ships in an Iraqi air attack. But they show clearly that the Iranian airliner was not shot down wittingly, as the Tehran regime claims. - Le Monde (Paris).

While we may safely assume that it is not American policy to shoot down civil aircraft, we may also wonder how the U.S. Navy could make such a tragic blunder. In seeking to give the ayatollah a bloody nose. the Americans mistook a harmless Airbus for a fighter and pressed the button twice. The greatest navy in history has been behaving like a pugnacious teen-ager spoiling for a fight, and as so often happens on such occasions, the wrong people got hurt. The author of the U.S. Navy's rules of engage-ment in the Gulf should be cashiered at once as a service to mankind. — The Guardian (London).

The destruction of an Iranian airliner is an appalling mistake with possibly profound long-term consequences for American policy in the Middle East and Iran's relations with the West. Within Iran the moderate factions seeking rapprochement with Western powers could be weakened. Unfortunately for Britain and other European countries which have naval patrols in the Gulf, Tehran is unlikely to differentiate between America and its allies.

— The Daily Telegraph (London). Americans, the world's policemen? A policeman can do anything but make a mistake. - France-Soir (Paris). The United States pleads self-defense, in terms curiously similar to those employed at another time by Soviet officials justifying the annihilation of the South Korean Boeing. The Iranians denounce imperialist barbarism and speak of the "innocent victims" while forgetting to point out that their own almost daily strategy is to send their armed forces after civilian targets. The Pentagon comes out of this gravely discredited at the very moment when it is on the hot seat for an internal scandal.

- Libération (Paris).

The president appeared to deny the possibility that the attack had been foolish, overly aggressive, an act of retaliation stemming from recently changed rules of engagement or the result of panic and inexperience. Admiral William Crowe was even less contrite. The slow, stumbling and essentially self-righteous American reaction was reminiscent of the Soviet Union under Brezhnev. It is sobering to recall the fury with which the Reagan administration responded to the shooting down of a Korean airliner by the Soviet Union in 1983. There was no hint of [American] concern that one of the most advanced naval vessels in the world had somehow failed to identify a civil airbus.

- The Independent (London).

P ARIS — Halfway into 1988, British histo-I rian Paul Kennedy has already locked up the Golden Tee award for this year. The allinclusive theme of his book, "The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers," allows pundits and selves (and the world) try everything."

Americans "blindly trust foreign scoundrels politicians to tee up their own favorite theory about the approaching end of the American Century and drive it 300 yards down the fairway. The arguments around the book have easily eclipsed the book itself.

Historical pessimists agree with and expand upon Mr. Kennedy's theorizing about the relative decline of American power because of "imperial overstretch." Optimists vigorously refute the vision of Uncle Sam as has-been. Each side cites GNP-defense budget ratios, comparative industrial cycles and other macro-history far into the night.
But surprisingly little attention has been paid to the challenge which this ponderous volume mounts to the once deeply ingrained notion of American exceptionalism. The idea that America and its ultimate fate could be compared to that of other countries, past or present, for better or for worse, was simply a logical absur-dity. Now it is a bone for serious chewing. No one doubted in simpler days that "Time was a gentleman and a friend of the United in the words of Luigi Barzini, the late Italian journalist who knew and understood America as few foreigners have. He under-stood its ability to balance the contradictory impulses both to save and to ignore the world. He saw how the cycles of one impulse prepared the way for and fed the other.

Nearly a decade before Oliver North, "star wars" and Panama's Manuel Antonio Noriega vaulted into the headlines, Mr. Barzini, in his book "O America," wrote admiringly of

At one time they put a finger in every pot, at another time they dream of becoming entirely self-sufficient behind walls of electronic apparatuses and diabolical weapons; sometimes lose patience and land marines on distant beaches ... "

Mr. Barzini understood this ability to meander as strength. It helped inoculate America against overstretch. Mr. Kennedy, who has crossed the Atlantic to teach at Yale, suggests that America looks quite different to an observant foreigner today. "It simply has not been given to any one society to remain permanenty ahead of all the others," he argues.

That's fair enough for the history of others.

politically and spiritually for American power to decline as a "multipolar" world comes into being, when many foreigners do not?

True, some alert foreigners have been quick to endorse the argumentation of the Kennedy book. "Analysts" quoted in a Washington Post dispatch from Singapore cited it as having "a lot of impact" in convincing Asians that the United States is "a fading nation." This has helped stir anti-Americanism in that city state and elsewhere, said these unnamed analysts.

It is hard to conjure up a better example of Mr. Kennedy being used to tee up an argument with little loft of its own. It amounts to saying that Asians feel that it is O.K. to kick somebody going down after kowtowing to him while he was up. I don't buy it. The problems the United States is having in Singapore have much more to do with the increasingly erratic and dictatorial behavior of Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew than with a decline in power.

In Western Europe, there is scant evidence But why do so many Americans seem ready to accept his implicit judgment that it is fair people look at America. The continuing ability that Mr. Kennedy's thesis is altering the way of the United States to create new jobs when most of them cannot and the recovery of the stock market against the background of the trade and budget deficits inspires awe (and some myrification) in most EC countries.

Behind the Iron Curtain, where East Europe Behind the fron currain, where has trappe-an and Soviet citizens have reason to know something about "imperial overstretch" first-hand, belief in American exceptionalism is alive and well. In a conversation a few months ago.

Lech Walesa dismissed my half-jest that Ron-ald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev could wind up at their summits commiserating with each other over their problems. "Gorbachev would say 'I envy you every problem you have,' if he were being honest," the Polish distident said. There is no question that America will have to adjust its overextended global presence and re-sponsibilities in the 1990s. But the instinctive American ability to meander will make it less painful and less drastic than many are predict painful and less transfar and the United States will accomplish that task judiciously and prove Paul Kennedy to be at least premature in con-cluding that time is no longer America's friend.

The Washington Post.

To Europe, the U.S. Presidency Is the Big Worry

P ARIS — The trendy American debate over decline is both refreshing and disquieting.

It is refreshing because three years ago the fashionable debates on both sides of the Atlantic concerned "Europessimism." Americans and Europeans alike were looking at Europe with a sense of gloom. From Euroterrorism to Europessimism, the concept of Europe was more negative than positive. Today, as Europe seems to be looking bravely ahead, preparing for a unified internal EC market in 1992, it is America that is worried about itself

A relative decline of America from the artificial peak of the late 1940s and the '50s, when

By Dominique Moïsi

Europe and Japan were recovering from World War II and the United States had a quasi-monopoly on nuclear weapons and a predominant dollar, is only natural. It is also understandable that, after the Vietnam War, America could recover only slowly from its self-limiting attitude toward foreign affairs.

Yet many Europeans worry because the U.S. fears about decline coincide with questions about the significance and durability of the Gorbachev experiment in the Soviet Union. With Europe and the rest of the world facing the imaginative diplomacy of the new Soviet leadership, what concerns Europeans is not so much perceptions of a decline in U.S. power but rather what they see as a decided decline in the quality of the American presidency.

Since Dwight Eisenhower, Americans have not seemed to be able to elect a fully reliable president. John Kennedy had charisma, but his tragic death saved him from what would probably have been a severe judgment. Lyndon Johnson will be remembered for his civil rights achievement, but he was destroyed by the war in Vietnam that Mr. Kennedy had imprudently unleashed Richard Nixon was well liked by Europeans; his Machiavellian qualities, reinforced by the realpolitik of his main policy adviser, Henry Kissinger, sounded European. But his self-destructiveness led to his fall in Watergate and a weakening of America.

After the Gerald Ford interim, Jimmy Carter,

an idealistic engineer, had all the qualities of seriousness and attention to detail that would have made him a good prime minister, but he lacked the regal quality associated with the U.S. idency. Ronald Reagan has flair and chans. ma, but he has been so far removed from attention to details that he was swept away in frightening crises such as the Iran-contra affair.

Now that U.S. power has been put into perspective as an emerging multipolarity slowly replaces bipolar world politics, the caliber of America's leadership is more important than ever. U.S. superiority can no longer compensate for the lack of leadership qualities. From that point of view, the election campaign between Michael Dukakis and George Bush is not fully reassuring for America's allies. Neither man conveys an impression of possessing statesmanlike ministerial" qualities of Mr. Carter.

Europe's paradox is that it wants to be guided by a weaker country, but one with a stronger leadership. A weaker America, a reinforced dialogue with the Soviet Union and a multipolar world all point the way to a more active Europe with a full-fledged role of responsibility. Yet the Europeans, being aware of their dependence in terms of security, also wish to be reassured by a firm and reliable U.S. leadership, which they will eventually criticize if they resent its too heavy or erratic guidance.

Few voters could have told an inquiring reporter precisely what of-fense had been committed by which Democratic officeholder, but of the overall impression there was no doubt. The more Truman era Democrats ran out of ideas, the more Americans got to read about conflict of interest and influence peddling. In 1988, the Republicans who came to Washington for Richard Nixon's inauguration have been around nearly 20 years. That is just as long as the Democrats who came to town with had been in Washington when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Pentagon procurement, Department of Justice and Internal Revenue Service scandals began breaking in 1950-52. Hardly anyone remembers 1952 names like Assistant Attorney General T. Lamar Caudie and Harry Vaughn, the White House appointments secretary, but they were fore-bears of 1988 names like Meese, Deaver and Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. It is not just the Reagan administration which has had a Pentagon scandal; so did the Truman ninistration --- the "five-percenters" who traded Department of Defense influence, some of them working (then as now) hand in glove with military procurement officers.

Let's get to the psychological heart of the matter. The average 1988 voter give a damn about either McGovern Democrats or Bush Republicans.

The Washington Post.

I believe that while continuing to tution and the laws of the land.

I still believe that the next president is no more informed about the details of alleged corruption than the average 1952 voter. But what the situations share is a strong aroma of easy ethics and influence for hire. That would hurt any regime, but especially a 1988 administration that has put so much emphasis on the high-mindedness of economic incentives. Conflict-of-interest situations have already begun to undermine White House defense and trade policies. Even Mr. Bush, whose personal ethics are not subject to any doubt, has recently been accused of bad judgment. As soon as he named James Lake, an ing for Japan, as his communications director, United Auto Workers President Owen Bieber found the appoint-ment "offensive and disgusting." For Mr. Lake will continue to work for three Japanese industrial clients even as he advises the Republican candidate. That kind of insensitivity is right up there in Mr. Messe's league.

Historically, there has been an unappreciated sophistication in the way voters chose to regard scandals. When such behavior came at the beginning of a new political period, the electorate often pushed it aside or subordinated it. That happened with the Teapot Dome scandal Republican Vice President Calvin Coolidge, taking over af-ter the death of Warren Harding (during whose tenure the skulduggery had occurred), won a landslide victory in 1924 as if nothing had happened. Only Republican leadership could provide the right decibel count for the freedoms and flapping of the roaring 20s. and the voters somehow knew it.

A similar subordination happened in 1972; the early evidence of the Watergate scandal bothered voters but did not dissuade them from giving Richard Nixon a huge 61 percent national majority over George McGov-ern, the too-far-left Democratic presidential nominee. And for all that Watergate interrupted the conservative tide in 1974, it did not keep it from resurging in 1978 and 1980.

A long, cumulative buildup of conflict of interest and sleaze is something else. At a certain point, voters take it as evidence that the party to which they have been entrusting national power have run out of creativity and become bogged down in greed. That description is now beginning to apply to the Republicans.

the party's cloudy 1988 political-ethical horizon. Democrats, too, face public skepticism for the unfolding evi-dence of their own corruption and conflicts of interest in the House of Representatives, where they have been busy entrenching for 34 years.

Indeed, the last time the Republicans won the House of Representatives was in 1952, the same year when the corruption in the Democratic administration of Harry Truman became a major issue. But the Democrats quickly recaptured the House in 1954, and party control is now so hed as to make Wh House Republicans look like mere Washington tourists by comparison. From an institutional standpoint dent special prosecutor has been appointed to look into the conduct of House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas, or that the three congressmen so far identified with the Pentagon corruption investigation are Democrats. If ordinary power corrupts, 34 years of uninterrupted hegemony breeds a special nonchalance and arrogance. To some small extent, this behavior by congressional Democrats may restrain voter enthusiasm for sweep-ing the Republicans out of the White House. After all, the ethical standards of the House of Representatives are hardly likely to improve if Democrats are restored to control of the entire elected federal government again - White House. Senate and House of Representatives alike.

Thirty-six years ago, the party asked a distillusioned electorale, "Had enough? Vote Refablican." This year, on balance, the same micstion appears to favor the Democrats.

Never before in a U.S. political campaign has the party out of power made such an overt effort to undermine a peace negotiation. Mr. Dukakis is saying to the Communist puppets and their Cuban protectors: Do not make a deal now. About Ukrainian Churches

The headline "Russian Church Eases Stand Against Ukrainian Catholics" (June 6) gives the impression that this has indeed happened. Unfortunately it has not. And the Ukrainian Catholic Church did not "dissolve itself" in 1946 but was forcibly dissolved and merged with the Russian Orthodox Church.

The Russian Orthodox Church is hostile to legalization of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church and the Ukrainian Catholic Church. Yet it is estimated that the Ukraine is home to 50 to 80 percent of Russian Orthodox Churches open in the Soviet Union. The government's return of the Monastery of the Caves in Kiev (closed under the reformer Khrushchev, mally high prices and bad service.

not Stalin) is welcome, but it has not been returned to its proper historical owner, the Ukrainian Orthodox Church. A new era of church-state détente in the Soviet Union is good, but not at the expense of the rights of 50 million Ukrainian Orthodox and Catholic believers who have no church of their own in their country. Glasnost has still to apply to them. The Soviet press is con-tinuing a crude and dishonest campaign

Musicians All

The report "Met in Tokyo: Opera and Beer" (May 31) describes a visit to Japan by "52 singers, 72 chorus members, 103 musicians, 50 technicians" from the Metropolitan Opera. But what is a singer, be he or she a soloist or a member of the chorus, if not a musician? This singer considers himself a musician, as I am sure do those 124 members of the touring Metropolitan, including Placido Domingo and Kathleen Battle. KURT STREIT,

Poor Losers in the Stands

In response to the report "Wilander Routs Leconte" (June 6):

As a spectator at the French Open, I was appalled by the crowd's lack of support for their countryman, Henri Leconte. They should have been proud to have their country represented in the men's final of this very French event. I am sure that if Leconte had beaten the odds and won, the French would have made him a national hero. They lost their manners with his defeat. The crowd might have done well to remember that this was Leconte's first Grand Slam final. He was a gracious loser.

Negative Is Better: A File Of Semantical Bum Raps

By Charles Krauthammer

WASHINGTON -- Now that the Schizophrenic: Of two minds. This a tour through some of the more delightful curiosities in the garden of American English: words that have come to mean their opposite.

A common example in medicine occurs when the doctor informs you that the results of your test for gonorrhea have come back and they are positive. This is not good news.

Politics, too, has its roster of selfcontradictory words.

Czar: Dictator, kingpin, a man who knocks heads. But the people are clamoring for exars. You got crowded skies? Pop-off aircraft roofs? In April a blueribbon national commission on airline safety recommended the appointment of a "safety czar."

When the national hysteria on drug abuse reached one of its periodic peaks last month, the cry went up for a "drug czar." (Jesse Jackson, who rightly aspires to something higher, has been mentioned for the job, generally by people who would like him kept busy and away from other things.)

The clamor for a czar is one sure sign that a problem has become insolvable. In the 1970s, when the United States was beset by inflation and energy shortages and no one had the slightest idea how to solve either, America fashioned for itself an energy czar (William Simon) and an inflation czar (Alfred Kahn). Their achievements are hard to recall, but no harder than they were to

Hence the real definition. Czar (American usage): a person to whom all power is given to solve an insolvable problem; a powerless official.

There is something rather touching about the use of this quaint term. It shows that Americans, a thoroughly democratic people, have a tiny authoritarian streak that occasionally demands expression. Being such hyperdemocrats, Americans indulge the vice only for problems that they know in advance are impervious to human intervention. American czars thus allow Americans to think they are going to solve a social problem. But since they assign czars to inherently insolvable problems, they defeat, even as they indulge, their authoritarian impulses.

Cassandra: A worrier given to constant, harping doom-saying. A syn-onym for crying wolf. This is the classic case, literally, of inverted meaning, be-cause in fact Cassandra was right. She cried wolf and the wolf came. She foretold, correctly, the destruction of Troy.

Museum of Cheese has opened in usage is so common that it is now Rome, New York, we can take time out beyond repair. In fact, schizophrenics from serious work and catch up on are generally of one mind - in the some light chores. As a public service saddest cases, of none - and that one and a pedantic summer exercise. I offer tends to be muddled and deluded. Indeed, paranoid schizophrenics are the most single-minded people on Earth. Maginot Line: A synonym for massive, expensive, obsolete and thus futile fortifications. Wrong, I say. The Maginot Line worked. It is true that Hitler conquered France, but he had to go around the Maginot Line, through Belgium, to do it. What the French needed was not less Maginot Line but more. Solomonic: Has not only come to mean judicious and wise but refers to a certain kind of judiciousness and wisdom, the kind that solves an impossible dispute by splitting the difference and playing things right down the middle. For example, according to this usage, a Solomonic decision in the Baby M case would have given equal custody to the Whiteheads and the Sterns.

But if the judge had truly wanted to follow Solomon, he would have given (as, in fact, he did give) the baby to just one set of parents. In his most famous case, that is what Solomon did. He only pretended to split the difference. It was a ruse to expose the counterfeit claimant and thus enable him to award both halves of the baby to the real mother.

Some of these inverted meanings are charming. Others make for a nice irony. In any case, I am not trying to overturn perfectly serviceable and universally accepted usage. That would be as futile as Canute ordering the tides to turn back . . .

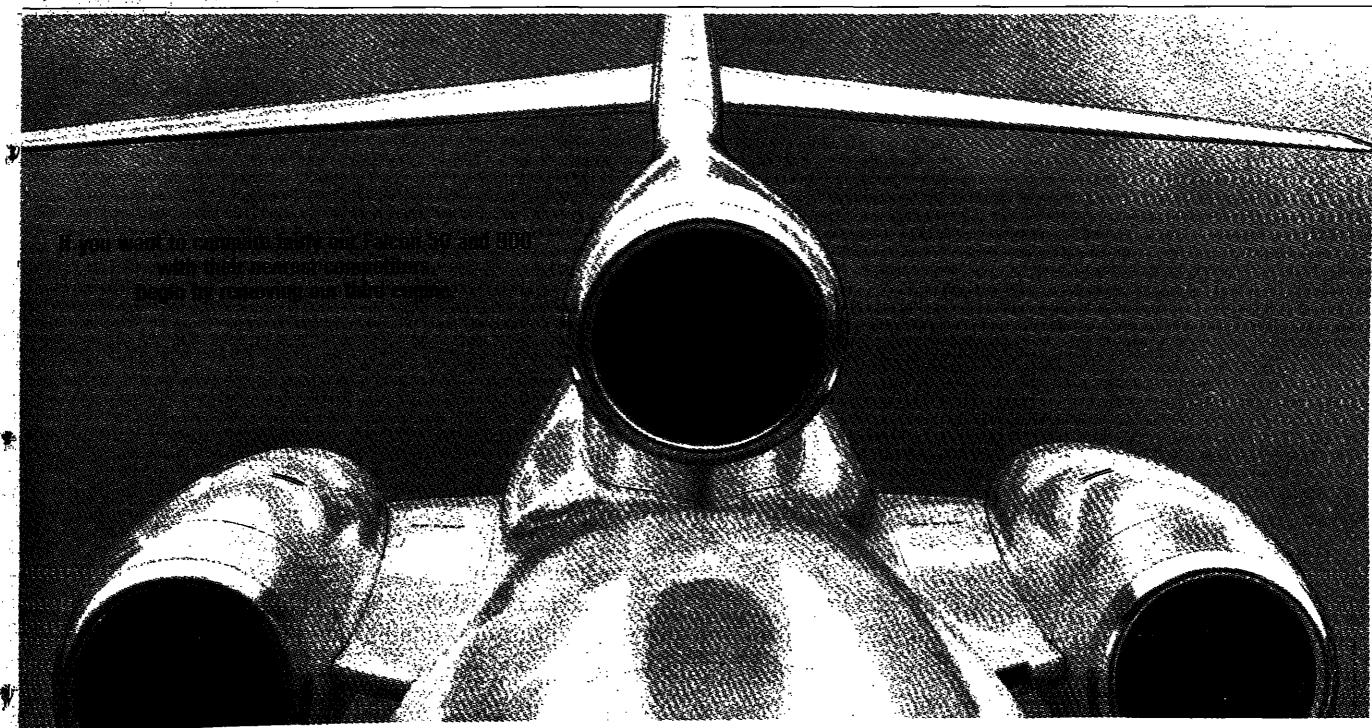

Well, not quite. Canute, you see, go a bum rap. Far from being the vain fool he is remembered as, he commanded the tides to turn back in order to refute his flatterers, who were ascribing to him divine powers. He ordered the tides to retreat, knowing that they would not obey. Now history has him down as a pretentious twit.

As Ray Donovan, former secretary of labor, said after the jury acquitted him of fraud, "Where do I go to get my reputation back?"

Why, to Krauthammer's Political Dictionary -- if you are dead and maliciously reborn as an idiom, that is, Have I missed other historical wrongs? No polemics please. If you think Quisling was a Norwegian patriot, you can save yourself the stamp.

NEW YORK — In "Miracolo
d'Amore," her Italianate reverie about romance and its discontents, Martha Clarke pushes be-yond the musical theater experiments of her previous "Garden of Earthly Delights" and "Vienna: Lusthaus.

Call "Miracolo" a dance-theater piece if you wish, but, unlike the other works directed by this onetime Pilobolus dancer, it contains no dancing. Text has also vanished now, to be replaced by an all-purpose Italian double-talk, Peter Brookish bird noises and untranslated song lyrics from Petrarch.

A show that sounds like opera through the Metropolitan Museum of Art, "Miracolo d'Amore" may passingly remind visitors of Robert Wilson or Pina Bausch or Stephen Sondheim, but Martha Clarke is shaping a dreamy theatrical form that is unmistakably her own.

Whether that fascinating form alone is a substitute for stimulating content is another matter. Though "Miracolo d'Amore" is supposed to spark provocative thoughts about love and violence between men and women, one finds oneself dwelling on the impressive marshaling of stage images, the pretty voices and, in a field day for professional and amateur critics, the erature and music that have been packed into the work's 55 minutes.

A product of no fewer than three Shakespeare Festival, the Spoleto Festival LLS.A. and the First New York International Festival of the Arts - "Miracolo d'Amore" flirts with becoming the highbrow designers and her performers to create metamorphoses (whether Kafkaesque or Grandvillian). At no point, however, does "Miracolo" cohere and expand to take on a spontaneous, nightmarish life of its own, as "Vienna: Lusthaus" did when it swept us into the true horror of a civilization bent on private and mass destruction.

If anything, "Miracolo" seems to contract and evaporate as it goes along, as though Clarke were giving us a predigested formula gleaned from her past successes.

As in both "Vienna" and "Earth-Delights," her Hieronymus sosch re-creation, the imagery of "Miracolo" spirals from intimations of Eden to hell, but this time the audience doesn't fly between those points. We're pushed there mechanically by a director who seems to be willing her hallucinations into existence.

Clarke may be better off when her fantasies cluster around a highly specific meditative starting point, whether fin-de-siècle Vienna or Bosch's triptych, than when she attempts to embrace an amorphous subject like love. Her views about men, women, sex and violence have not changed from "Vienna" to "Miracolo" — nor, necessarily, should they — but her dramatiza-tion of them has lost its visceral vitality. Without a powerful central vision to drive it, "Miracolo" cracks into a mosaic of highly selfconscious little tableaux, each thought out to a fault.

If all that thinking offers few insights into male-female entangle ments, it does pay off in meticulous and impressive showmanship. From the haunting voices of the coloratura Elisabeth Van Ingen and the countertenor John Kelly to the non-verbal acting and contor-tionist movement of Rob Besserer, Paola Styron and Felix Blaska, the performance level is high.

Israel's claustrophobic set, with its odd angles, windows and doorways, is a microcosm of the labyrinthine mysteries of Venice; Gallo's lighting simulates a tan Tiepolo wash better than the finest artpress. Richard Peaslee's score, with its phantoms of Monteverdi madrigals and 19th-century opera is as sumptuous as any he has supplied to a Clarke or Brook production.

After 14 Weeks of 'Faust,' Simon Callow Gets His Due

By Francis X. Clines

New York Times Service

T ONDON — Having finally I made a pact with his own grease-painted devil, Simon Callow has been reaping critical praise in the title role of a 7%hour production of Goethe's "Fausi," a rarely performed work, that just completed a run here that succeeded beyond his most infernal dreams.

The 39-year-old actor, director and writer has often confessed bedevilment at the fact that his acting background, though rich and eclectic, is notably weak in the classics.

He tells of having been left hourse and fearful when he attempted "Titus Andronicus" in his younger days; he has openly yearned for the alchemy to transform this shortcoming. Like Fanst, Callow has been granted his wish in spades. He has carried the season's surprise hit on his shoulders, an enormous weave of rhymed couplets in which he opened the play with a virtual 40-minute soliloquy as Faust at age 70, moved in 90 minutes naked and wet as a newborn into rejuvenation at age 25, and then coursed forward to age 120 across four hours of epic joys and agonies. Toward the latter part of this run, Callow was sensing his feat almost as a hallucination: "I begin to think, 'Have I ever been off this stage?"

scenes requiring Faust to slump on stage and play at sleeping, he actually could nod off. "Just for a minute, very refreshing, down to alpha level or something."

The play involved a dreamily hazardous set with a heavenly arc of high gymnastic steel where Faust and Mephistopheles must agilely repair to bargain and be-

It has sudden eruptions of swimming pools and fireworks, endless clamberings of actors through Goethe's fretwork of heated lyrics and voracious

The play had been such a pop-ular success in this era of blockbuster buffs that the theater had to extend its eight-week run six more weeks to tap the tourist

"All English actors know that the ultimate challenge is a classical text," said Callow.

Rebuffed as a cocky youngster by the Royal Shakespeare Company, Callow has become much the proud autodidact of the En-

He strutted his own bit of deity envy and incensed some of he West End establishment in his book, "Being an Actor," when he urged actors to rebel against the 'directocracy" that would belittle their force in a play.

Callow has also written a biography of Charles Laughton and is planning another book on Orson Welles's stage life.
He also will direct a Scottish

Opera production of "Die Fledermaus," play the title role in a staging of "Volpone," direct a movie version of Penelope Fitzgerald's novel, "At Freddie's," and transfer "Shirley Valentine," a one-woman show he directed,

He also does handsomely in cinema, best known lately per-haps for his character turn in 'Room With a View" as the clergyman who drops discretion to romp boyishly in a swimming

"In a sense Goethe's 'Faust' is ical text to end all classical texts," Callow said. "It's quite a difficult verse, harder than Shakespeare because of all the rhymed couplets and because, of course, it lacks the immortal melodies of Shakespeare."
Goethe's "Fanst" came two centuries after Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus," fascinating some connoisseurs because it focused more on human tragedy as its core even as, unlike Marlowe, Goethe allowed Faust to escape the devil's clutches at the end.

Callow saw his role as "an unbelievable series of burdles, like a torture in a way," from the open-ing monologue's need to set a numerous subtle shifts of voice, posture and hope required to age convincingly.

You have to be ahead of the text," he said. "What characterizes great actors is their ability to enter into the thought processes of the character."

He was summoning up the dynamic reverence for language of Maggie Smith.

"She just goes right into the center, she's a miracle, sustaining three or four complex thought patterns in the middle of a performance and you understand everything she's thinking. What was inspiring was she never left her text right to the last performance, going through it before each show, making sure she was thinking as she was talking. Most actors use words for emotional purposes, but she shows it's all to do with thinking what you are

Even so, the mere mechanics of memorization was no small wonder in such a mammoth production as "Fanst."

"Learning the lines is the first step, but then the next step is forgetting them so they then can emerge in response to a stimulus from the outside. What I'm paid for is the work I do on myself to try and keep spontaneous about the play."

"Red lorry, yellow lorry," he said, uttering the British actor's classic line for exercising concen-

Soon he was Faust again, fulfilling role and pact with death and the wish that "Through all of time the achievement of my day upon earth will never pass

Well, not likely, said Callow. It was he, after all, who had done Faust: "Faust isn't doing me yet, unfortunately, and I don't know that he ever will," he

He sounded sadly Faustian in his frustration. "It's too late, it's always too late," he said and one could only cheer him with the wisdom of his deity: "Red lorry, yellow lony."

1 TV Museum, 2 Monument Builders

TEW YORK -- When William S. Paley, the architect of CBS. decided to erect a monument comhe helped create, it was to another venerable figure, from the world of architecture, that he turned. Paley's old friend and fellow octogenarian, Philip Johnson, shaped the design for a new Museum of Broadcasting.

Paley, who is also a co-chairman of the board of the International Herald Tribune, bought the $12 million for a site at 23 West 52d Street. And Johnson found Paley had more than a few ideas about the building's design.
Paley emphasized his desire that the building be "suitably dignified and beautiful." When the architect's first plan suggested an oma-mented facade. Paley balked. "Too gimmicky, too frilly" he decided, and the next several months were spent with the architect and client sign. Johnson acknowledges that "there used to be turrets and arch-The proposed 17-story tower will

U.S. Foreign Stock Index Gained in First Half of '88

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

EW YORK — With a strengthening dollar, U.S. investors in securities denominated in foreign currencies saw most of their gains moderate in the second quarter, but they still enjoyed impressive appreciation for the first half of the year. Markets in such diverse regions as Scandinavia, the Pacific Basin and Canada posted the best gains have the half.

Of the individual markets, some of the best gains were registered in developing countries that permit direct investments by foreigners in shares of their nation's companies. The World Index of foreign stock markets that are monitored by Morgan Stanley & Co. increased by 9.5 percent, expressed in dollar terms, in the first six months of 1988, despite a decline of 1.4 percent in the second quarter.

By comparison, the bluechip Dow Jones industrial average of 30 stocks on the New York Stock Exchange increased to 2,141.71 from 1,988.06 in the second quarter, an increase of 7.7 percent.

In the first half of 1988, the Dow Jones average rose 10.5 percent. The Standard & Poor's index of 500 shares rose 10.7 "During the first quarter, when the dollar was still weakening relative to many foreign currencies, the indexes of some overseas farkets such as those in Japan and Scandinavia, rose to record Avels," said Mark H. Sladkus, vice president at Morgan Stanley.

"But as the dollar strengthened in the second quarter, many foreign companies either lost sales to our market or had their profit margins reduced."

The dollar's rebound in the second quarter especially affected U.S. investors in the Japanese stock market Still, the World Index for Japan rose 12.9 percent for the first half, despite a drop of 7.3 percent in the second quarter.

On a regional basis, the Scandinavian markets showed a big gain, 18.7 percent for the half, with only a 2.2 percent gain for the second quarter, Mr. Sladkus said.

HE RECOVERY in world commodity prices thus far this year helped the Pacific Basin markets. The Australian stock market, which rebounded sharply from a poor showing in 1987, rose 29.5 percent in the first half and 17.3 percent in

The markets in Singapore and Malaysia also benefited from strong commodity prices, soaring 30.5 percent for the half and 17.5 percent for the latest quarter. Hong Kong's lively equities arket rose 17.7 percent in the half and 6.7 percent in the quarter. Canadian markets led the North American region, also largely because of strong demand for natural resources. Morgan Stanley's World Index for Canada rose 15.2 percent in the first half, but the gain shrank to 5.4 percent in the second quarter.

Despite the strength of most European currencies in the first half, the European stock markets did not fare well. Austria's markets did worst, mainly because of the poor performance of its heavy industry. The index for Austria fell 15.9 percent in the first half and 6.8 percent in the latest quarter.

West Germany's markets had small declines of 1.9 percent for the half and 3.1 percent for the second quarter. Italy's index fell 8 percent for the half and 8.9 percent for the quarter, also because of weaker exports. The British pound's sharp rise in the first quarter adversely affected exports, resulting in a decline of 1.6 percent for the half and 4.3 percent for the latest quarter.

France's stock market countered the trend and rose 11.8

France's stock market countered the trend and rose 11.8 percent for the half and 16.6 percent for the latest quarter, despite national elections and a scandal on the Bourse.

Dollar Moves Up On Yen

Close of 135.43 Is Highest of Year

LONDON — The dollar closed Monday at its highest level of the year against the yen in Europe, af-ter a notable lack of intervention by the Bank of Japan, dealers said.
In London, the dollar rose to 135.43 yen from 134.15 on Friday, and it also moved up to 1.3288
Deutsche marks from 1.8200.

"The Bank of Japan missed a golden opportunity to intervene in today's markets, which were very thin because of the July 4 U.S. boliday," said a senior dealer at a major British bank.

As a result of this lost opportuni-ty, the dollar could push toward 137 yen this week, traders said. The dollar jumped early Monday on news that the U.S. Navy shot down an Iranian passenger jet.

The upward trend against all the major currencies followed a sharp rise on Asian markets, where the business day ends before Europe's

Its absence from Monday's markets reinforced speculation that the Japanese Finance Ministry had struck a deal with the United States on a hands-off policy on the dollar. Nevertheless, the market was becoming jittery about how much fur-

NEW YORK — The paper mill that sits on the Pigeon River near Canton, North Carolina, never stops if it can help it. Every day, it turns out milk and orange-juice cartons and envelope paper.

As one sunny day has replaced another over the past three months, the Pigeon River has fallen. If the skies do not open in the next few weeks, the plant that never stops will have to shut down. Champion International Corp., which owns the facility, has fretted about the factory's vulnerability to drought for years. Last August, when the river was dangerously low, the plant had to shut down for several days.

"This has been happening to us earlier and earlier in the summer," said Robert Turner, a spokesman. "Having this happen is June is really troubling. These days, you wouldn't put a paper plant on the Pigeon River. It's too risky." With so much of the country withering in drought, the use of water has once again crept into

As it happens, most manufacturers have curbed their use of water for reasons having little to do with availability and a lot to do with money. As a result of the 1972 Water Pollution Control Act, companies have been compelled to treat, or pay others to treat, their wastes. Heavy users such as

U.K. Banks Lift Interest Rates By Half Point

LONDON - Britain raised interest rates on Monday for the fifth time since early June in a renewed effort to halt a consumer-spending spree that the government fears will rekindle inflation.

The Bank of England, the central bank, raised its money-market at 9.5 percent and were likely to go up on Aug. 1 to between 10.75 which it lends money to commercial banks.

in raising base lending rates to 10

Economists had expected the in-crease since last week, when the Bank of England raised its rate to 9.5 percent after Britain reported a record £1.21 billion ($2 billion) current-account balance of payments deficit in May. That deficit, which measures trade and international payments for such services as banking, shipping and tourism, is a key signal of inflationary pressure, conomists said.

The British government has wor-ried that a big deficit means Britons are spending too much on imports and that that buying spree will send inflation soaring.

West Germany's central bank, the Bundesbank, raised its key dis-count rate to 3 percent from 2.5 percent last week.

With Monday's increase, the Bank of England has boosted interest rates 2.5 percentage points from the 10 year lows reached in May, when the government wanted to cool a rally in the pound, which it feared would price British goods out of foreign markets.

The pound fell to $1.6830 from

$1.7005 after the Monday rate increase. The Financial Times index of 100 blue chip British stocks dropped 10.2 points to 1,848.0

Britain had said earlier that credit advanced by finance houses, jumped to £4.08 billion in May, up 9.4 percent from the April total. Following the bank's interest rate increase, the Halifax, Britain's largest savings and loan society, said its home loan rates were al-spokesman said. At 10 percent, the British base rate is now back up to the level it had reached just before the global stock market collapse in October.

The Bank of England's decision was facilitated by a decline in the pound to levels well below the peaks reached in March and April. In March, April and May, interest rates were lowered by 1 5 points in three installments to counter the upward pressure on the pound on foreign exchange markets, reaching 7.5 percent on May 17, their lowest In March, the chancellor of the Exchequer, Nigel Lawson, forecast a current-account deficit of £4 billion for the whole year, but the figure for the first five months alone is £4.7 billion, and some analysts have predicted a shortfall of up to £12 billion for the year. Inflation, which fell to 3.3 percent on an annual basis in February, has risen to 4.2 percent. Wages also are rising at what officials consider an excessive rate. Last week, Mr. Lawson said he did not regret the tax reductions offered in the last budget and that the country's trade deficit could easily be financed by the budget

While he has been generally praised by observers so far for his management, there has been recent criticism in financial circles, which are beginning to wonder about the scope and timeliness of the tax cuts. Some analysts were quoted in the Sunday press as saying it would take interest rates of 11 percent or even 12 percent to stem British inflationary pressures.

Behind the Glow, Britain's Economy Appears Unbalanced

By Warren Getler International Herald Tribum

LONDON — Despite outward signs of robust health, including falling unemployment, strong consumer spending and growing industrial output, the British economy has become badly unbalanced, according to economists and other observers.

They said the country is choking on a flood of imports, its consumer boom is being financed by excessive levels of credit and the export-competitiveness of British industry is threatened by a shortage of skills.

Concern about economic prospects ex-tends to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who described as "deeply disappointing" the announcement of a current-account deficit of £1.2 billion ($2 billion) in May, a record monthly shortfall in the broadest measure of trade performance.

The deficit, which amounted to £4.7 bil-lion in the first five months of this year, now appears headed for a full-year shortfall of £10 billion to £12 billion. That is up to three times the £4 billion figure predicted by Nigel Lawson, the chancellor of the Exchequer, in his March budget address.

A deficit of that size, compared with the 1987 shortfall of £1.6 billion, indicates that the country is now consuming considerably more than it can produce. In the March-May period, imports rose 11 percent from a year earlier while exports grew only 4.5 percent.

On Monday, the Bank of England prompted a half-point increase in British banks' base lending rates, to 10 percent, the fifth such increase in as many weeks, aimed at capping inflationary pressures and providing support for the pound.

could approach 5 percent by the autumn, economists said.

Mr. Lawson, who has engineered the recent interest rate increases, attempted to put a brave face on the trade figures, saying that they do not threaten economic recovery. "There is no reason whatsoever why the trade deficit should bring this success story to an end. Indeed, it is not unusual for a country to have a trade deficit at a time of rapid growth," he said. But private economists, industry experts and politicians warned that Mr. Lawson's view does not provide the full picture — that consumer demand is sucking in growing lev-els of imports, which, if capital expenditure and industrial expansion trail off, could leave the country with an embarrassingly wide trade gap and a run on the pound. Half-point interest rate increases, they savings as a proportion of disposable in-come, has plummeted. Since 1981, when the ratio stood at 13 percent, it has fallen steadi-ly to 5.3 percent in the first quarter. As announced Monday, new credit advanced to consumers—including bank credit card and retail-house credit card financing -totaled £3.57 billion in May, up 25 percent from a year earlier.

Bank lending hit a record £5.8 billion in April, but dropped back to £3.3 billion in May. The average since January, however, has been £4.4 billion, the highest for years.

Britain's narrowest money supply aggre-gate, M0, is expected to show annualized growth of 7.5 percent for June, above the 5.7 percent level recorded in May, and well in excess of the 1 percent to 5 percent target range. The jump would reflect, in part, the effect of recent income-tax breaks feeding into paychecks in June.

According to the latest edition of the Confederation of British Industry's quarterly industrial trends survey, 19 percent of manufacturing companies said they expected skills shortages to constrain output over the next A wide range of industries is affected, par-technical skills. Beginning in September, the government is to launch a £1.5 billion program to provide training at all levels of skill for as many as 600,000 imemployed people each year. Critics said such action runs the risk of being too little, too late. Andrew Britton, director of the London-based National Institute of Economic and Social Research, pointed out that as British output has surged over the last year, "the skills gap is now becoming a limiting factor."

It will grow worse, economists added, because a steady decline in the number of new entrants into the British labor force has started. According to government projections, by 1994 the number of 16- to 19-year-olds in Britain will have fallen by nearly 1 million. Because of the government's concern about maintaining the competitiveness of British exports, its options for cooling do-rates would tend to push the pound higher and thus hamper exports. Moreover, recent small interest-rate in-creases have failed to prompt higher mort-gage rates, the vehicle by which consumers mestic demand are limited. Higher interest are most directly affected. Echoing other economists, Mr. Britton said the £6 billion package of income tax cuts in Mr. Lawson's March budget was ill-timed; the cuts were too generous at a time of rising real incomes. Christopher Johnson, chief economic adviser to Lloyds Bank PLC, suggested that the government should increase employees' national-insurance contributions as a way of

May, according to government statistics released Monday. The Federal Statistics Office said the merchandise-trade surplus rose to 9.5 billion Deutsche marks ($5.2 billion) in April from 8.6 billion in March. West Germany's current-account surplus, which measures trade in goods and services, jumped 22.9 percent in April 1988 from April 1987 to 8.6 billion DM. This is a sharp turnaround from March, when the current-account surplus fell more than 45 percent to 4.7 billion DM.

Industrial production in May fell 0.1 percent from the April level, the Economics Ministry said.

West Germany has run big trade surpluses despite a de-cline in the dollar last year, which made its exports more expensive. But the surplus reported Monday was higher than expected, and analysts said it may have been distorted by European Community customs changes.

Observers Say Bank of Japan Is Letting Interest Rates Creep Higher

TOKYO - The Bank of Japan is quietly initiating a gentle upward trend in interest rates in a clear shift away from its earlier neutral monetary stance, according to managers at banks and securities houses. The reason for the change is the sharp rise of the dollar against the yen, which is increasing the potential for inflation, they pointed out. But the central bank activity has been so subtle that they call it "miniguidance," in contrast to the bank's decisive upward prodding of short-term rates in late 1985. On Saturday, the Bank of Japan allowed two- and three-month commercial bill discount rates to rise by 0.0625 of a percentage point each. The bank, which controls interbank commercial-bill trading, uses this market to fine-tune monetary policy. However, the managers said that there is little chance that the central bank will take strong action to guide interest rates higher unless the dollar rises above 140 yea, pointing out that the decline in the price of oil has offset the dollar's inflationary pressure. They predicted that yen interest rates will be on an upward trend at least until September because of seasonal factors.

There may be a rise in the discount rate from 2.5 percent between the end of the year and next March, but only if the United States raises its discount rate." said Teruo Shinato, manager and money mar-ket economist at Fuji Bank Ltd. The Bank of Japan may not move the discount rate in the next few months, given the stability in prices of goods and ahead of the U.S. presidential election," said Tesuya Dezuka, general manager of New Japan Securities Co.'s bond section. However, if the rise of the dollar against the yen reaches the point where it starts to push up domestic prices, the Bank of Japan may raise the discount rate in line with the market, most of the managers agreed. Short-term money market rates, which normally decline in April and May due to big seasonal money market surpluses, were steady in those months, indicating preparations for a nudging-up of interest rates, Mr. Shinato said.

moderating the rise of the dollar against the yen, while others said the Bank of Japan is just using the advance of the U.S. currency as an excuse to nudge up rates.
"I don't think the rises in bill rates were aimed solely at moderating the dollar's rise, or were an early attempt to stabilize prices," said Kishirou Fujino, manager of the short-term section of Daiwa Securities Co.'s bond department. "Some political considerations must have been involved." Finance Ministry officials and politicians do not appear worried about the depreciation of the yen as long as the currency is not the focus of speculation. "The near-term upward trend in short-term interest rates may peak out in mid-July, when financial institutions are expected to complete most of their necessary fund raising for end-September," said Mr.

Dezuka of New Japan Securities. Strong demand for funds is expected before Sept. 30, the date on which most Japanese corporations close their interim

Some money traders said the Saturday or annual business books. Financial instinuous will be in a hurry to collect these funds because the market becomes thin in late July as the summer holiday season starts, Mr. Dezuka said. The key two-month commercial bill discount rate is expected to rise in mid-July as it starts to cover the funds shortage at end-

September, traders said. The key open money market rate - on three-month certificates of deposit in the primary market — is expected to rise to 4.6 percent or higher in mid-July from the current 4.55 percent, traders said.
Foreign bankers on Monday repeated earlier requests to the Bank of Japan for permission to sell three-month bills at above market rates, traders said. They asked to be allowed to sell the bills at 0.063 of a point over the current 4.0625 percent in the interbank market.

The Bank of Japan denied the request because yen bond prices fell sharply after it let bill rates rise Saturday, but it is eventually likely to agree, traders said.

SEB Will Buy Rowenta for $170 Million

PARIS - The French appliances group SEB SA will buy Rowenta-Werke GmbH from Chicago Pacific Corp. of the United States for $170 million. SEB's chairman, Emmanuel Lescure, said Monday.

Rowenta, the West German maker of small household appliances, had a pretax operating profit in 1987 of 72 million francs ($12 million at current rates) on sales of 2 billion.

SEB, with the Calor, Tefal and SEB brand names, is a maker of nonstick cookware, electric fryers, irons and toasters. In 1987, it had net attributable profit of 164 million francs on sales of 3.74 billion. Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches LONDON - Beazer PLC said Monday that it would sell the chemicals business of Koppers Co., its recently acquired U.S. subsidiary, for $600 million to an investor group led by managers of the unit.

In early June, Koppers ended a three-month fight against Beazer's hostile takeover bid, accepting a sweetened offer of $1.81 billion. 1987 in Review Record Results

In 1987, the VIAG-Group, with its three sectors energy, aluminium, and chemicals, realized sales of DM 8.4 billion and boosted consolidated net income by 16 percent to DM 191 million.

Two major capital investments were made in 1987. Construction of the Isar 2 nuclear power station was completed, with electricity being delivered to the grid as of the beginning of 1988; and investments in new, technologically advanced facilities for the inanufacture of aluminium foils strengthened the competitive position of the aluminium sector.

Increased Dividend Proposed

Owing to the positive development of net income in 1987, an increase in the dividend from DM 6.00 to DM 6.50 per DM 50 nominal share will be recommended to the Annual Shareholders' Meeting. The Annual Meeting will be held on July 14, 1988,

Sales and Profits Increased Again

The favourable trend of profits also continued in the first three months of 1988, with the Group's industrial sectors showing a substantial growth in sales and higher profits. Overall, both consolidated sales and profits of the VIAG-Group exceeded the comparable figures of the previous year.

> Developments in Energy, Aluminium, and Chemicals

In the energy sector, an increased volume of electricity was generated by both nuclear and hydro power. Natural gas sales declined owing to mild weather conditions.

The aluminium sector achieved higher sales of fabricated products, particularly rolled products. Average proceeds were up for primary aluminium. In the chemicals sector, sales of both chemical and metallurgical products grew substantially.

Strengthening of the Group's Structure

VIAG completed the following acquisitions in the early months of 1988 in order to strengthen its industrial sectors:

34.5% of ALUMETALL, one of the leading German producers of aluminium castings; 100% of the British firm, MOLYPRESS, a supplier of metallurgical specialties for the electronics industry; 50% of the Dutch company, VAN NEERBOS BETON-CHEMIE; a one-third participation in KROPF-MÜHL, a major West German supplier of graphite; and two smaller biotechnology participations.

Outlook for 1988

Projections for 1988 call for a continuation of the positive development of business as well as for profits at least at the previous year's level.

ADAM, EVE AND THE SERPENT By Elaine Pagels. 189 pages. $17.95. Random House, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by John Gross

S HORT stories can cast long shadows. The story of Adam and Eve and their expulsion from Eden, compressed into two brief chapters in the Book of Genesis, has been made to yield meanings that have colored the whole course of Christian thinking about freedom, morality and human nature.

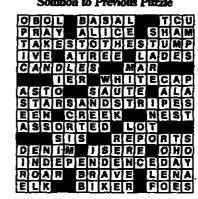

Most commonly, it has provided the basis for the doctrine of original sin. "In Adam's fall," as children used to be taught by the New England Primer, "we sinned all."
Yet for most early Christians, the lesson to be drawn from the story was very different. Though it plainly carried a warning, they also saw in it grounds for hope, a message of univer-sal freedom — the freedom to make moral choices - rather than one of preordained depravity.

It was only in the course of the fourth century that the notion of a universal fall from grace became firmly entrenched, and with it he assumption that sexual desire was inherent ly sinful. In "Adam, Eve, and the Serpent," Elaine Pagels addresses herself to the questions of how and why such a momentous change

Pagels is already well known as the author of "The Gnostic Gospels," which won the Na-tional Book Award in the United States, and her new book will only serve to confirm her reputation as both a scholar and a popular interpreter. The tale she has to tell is a complicated one. At first sight, for example, it might seem as though the decisive break with previous attitudes toward procreation and sexuality, both lewish and pagan, occurred at the very outset of the Christian era. Jesus praised celibacy and set the claims of his ministry above traditional family obligations; Paul went even further in the negative terms in which he spoke of sexual

But such attitudes, Pagels argues, were esentially the result not of revulsion from the flesh, but of what both men saw as the need to prepare for the end of the world. And their more radical views were in any case toned down by moderate-minded disciples in the generation or so that followed.

Pagels has a fascinating chapter on gnostic interpretations of the Adam and Eve story. Most gnostic texts depict Adam as represent-ing the ordinary psyche while Eve represents the higher spiritual self; some of them even gra as far as to treat the serpent, in what they see as his wisdom, as a manifestation of Christ.

Heady stuff; but she also reminds us that in the end, with their belief in a primordial fall that occurred before Adam and Eve were created, gnostics allowed a far smaller role for free will than orthodox Christians did.

One important way of asserting that free will, it was believed, was through abstaining from sex. But by the fourth century, as Pagels shows, the claims of celibacy were being urged with a new authoritarian vehemence, which had very little suggestion of freedom about it. When the monk Jovinian, a celibate himself, argued that celibacy was not necessarily holier than marriage, he drew down the wrath of some of the greatest names in the history of the Church, including Jerome and Ambrose and their younger contemporary Augustine With Augustine, the transformation was finally complete. Not only did he condemn the very act of sex as unnatural; he argued that the Fall had initiated the unfailing heredition unattainable: indeed, it was Adam's desire for freedom that had been his (and our) undoing.

Within the framework of Christian history, her book is continuously rewarding and illumi-

■ Guatemala Gets Berth

FIFA announced Monday that Guatemala has been chosen to replace Mexico in the soccer tournament at the 1988 Summer's Olympics. The Associated Press reported from Zurich. Guatemala will face Zambia, Iraq and Italy in Group B during the first round of the 16nation competition, being held in five South Korean cities.

FIFA last week banned Mexico from international soccer for two years, including the 1988 Games and the 1990 World Cup in Italy. The action stemmed from the Mexican youth team's using four players over the age limit of 20 in April's regional eliminations for "... a monumental task." the world championship.

Food still presents a problem for tourists as well as residents in the Soviet Union. There is a suspicion that all menus are decided by a food czar in the Kremlin, and that the exact same meal is served to everyone, four hours after the waiter takes the order. There are no chefs left in Russia. There are just dissidents cooking bad meals while waiting to get their exit visas for Brooklyn.

The only tourists I observed who were able to handle the bad food, the heat, the long waits and abuse

Why are such large numbers of tourists fighting to get into the Soviet Union? It's part of glasnost. The Evil Empire has opened its doors and all nationalities are dying to see what they have been missing. It turns out it is everything they thought it would be - and Because automobile production is down, the Soviet Union now has more alternate parking places than any country in the non-Free World. And the good news is that if you are a tourist, you don't have to worry about spending any money in Russia because there is nothing to buy.

But there are some disappointments. In the old days, the KGB followed all foreign visitors. If you were important enough, they would compromise you with a Russian bimbo, and then take pictures of the two of you with a hidden camera, which were later shown in the first-run movie houses in Samar-

Now, however, because there are so many tourists in the country, the KGB has thrown in the towel, and the bimbo who picks you up in a bar is just that.

Each person in our group was allowed to make one request of Soviet officials.

"Please," I begged, "don't send America any more Russian taxi drivers -at least not until the ones you sent us already learn how to get from Kennedy Airport to Manhat-

It was a short visit, but very pleasant. The one question we were constantly asked was, why did Americans like Gorbachev? Our answer was simple: "Because he doesn't look like a Communist."

My last act before leaving Mother Russia was to present a carton of cigarettes to one of my Soviet hosts. "Thank you," he said.
"Don't mention it," I replied.

"Because of glasnost, the surgeon general of the United States has made us promise to warn you that cigarettes could not only be hazardous to your health but to your five-year plan as well."

Louvre Pyramid Makes a Glowing Debut

By Edward Cody

Washington Post Service

PARIS — After a stormy courtship, the elegant old Louvre married its new glass pyramid, with Pierre Boulez and the Orchestre National de France supplying the music for the ceremony.

True to the history of this affair, the sky wore gray, and rain broke up the concert twice Sunday evening, the first time after only half an hour. Even so, it was an impressive display. As natural light faded, the golden light from within the pyramid came up. I.M. Pei's controversial monument had been at the audience's back during the concert, so it was not until they fled for cover that many in the crowd saw its full splendor. Freshly scrubbed, it glowed from within, set off by triangulated fountains that sent up illuminated spray against the background of the museum's historic facades.

It marked the first time Paris opinion makers had been invited to see Pei's muchdiscussed addition to the Louvre in its full majesty, and it was a major social event. Many of the 2,000 guests were lined up on Rue de Rivoli two hours before the concert. Indeed, weather notwithstanding, the evening's atmosphere seemed to send several years of backbiting over the project into the darkness.

Although Parisians watched the 72-foot (22-meter) pyramid rise beneath construction cranes last winter and President Francois Mitterrand formally inaugurated it in March, the concert marked its true comingout. But much work remains before museum-goers get to use the monument as Pei intended. That is scheduled for the end of the year, in time for the bicentennial of France's 1789 revolution.

The pyramid, in the Cour Napoléon between the Louvre's two wings, has been the focus of the controversy over Pei's project. But extensive changes also have taken place underground and out of sight.

The excavation, covering 750,000 square feet (70,000 square meters), made way for a wide entrance hall capped by the pyramid. Four smaller glass pyramids surround the main monument. The foyer has been flanked by space for subterranean shops, restaurants, an auditorium and passages to the museum proper.

In 1983 Mitterrand picked Pei, a Chinese-born American architect, to turn the Louvre from a former royal palace with a lot of art treasures into a modern museum. He made the decision after seeing and admiring Pei's design for the East Building of the National Gallery of Art in Washington, thus arranging what is likely to become his presidency's chief cultural legacy. The $330 million project required expanding the museum into the Richelieu wing, occupied by the Finance Ministry.

Visitors looking over LM. Pei's glass pyramid at the Louvre earlier this year.

Pei, 71, concluded that the expansion could best be accomplished through a large underground entrance and reception area that would provide information about nearly 4,000 of the Louvre's works.

Pei contended that the pyramid was the best way to bring daylight to the under-ground space while at the same time creating a dramatic image above the ground. The pyramid and the fover beneath already have taken on much of what will be then final appearance. By day, the shifting Paris sky sends light down through the pyramid; the rays are picked up and relayed by a floor of creamy stone quartied at Chassagne in the Burgundy wine country.

Pedestrians will enter through the pyramid and descend to the entrance hall on escalators, an airy spiral staircase or a startling piston of an elevator emerging from the floor without a shaft. Tour groups will arrive in buses at an underground garage and enter the foyer through a gallery of shops before scattering to the various collections.

While making room for these facilities under the Cour Napoléon, archaeologists found thousands of artifacts from nearly eight centuries of Paris history. Under the Cour Carrée, the enclosed courtyard that encompasses the Louvre's oldest section, they uncovered remains of the original 12th-century fortress built under Philippe Auguste and walls from additions made 200 years later by Charles V. These have been restored in what is now a lighted archaeological crypt that gives visitors an impression of walking back into history. The Louvre was first known as Lupara. after its site on what was then the edge of Paris. Along with its name, the building has been transformed by the vicissitudes of French history. The newest parts were completed only under Napoleon III in the 19th century.

The Louvre's role as a symbol of royal authority is so alive that Edouard Balladur, finance minister under the previous gov-ernment of Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, refused to leave the Richelieu wing despite Mitterrand's plans, citing a fear that his new quarters might lack the appropriate prestige. His replacement, Pierre Bérégo-voy. a Mitterrand friend and political ally, has pledged to move within a year to new headquarters in the Bercy section of Paris to make way for the museum's expansion.

This delay continued the political tension that underlay much of the earlier opposition to Pei's design. As the architect recalled last week, he was generally championed by the Paris newspaper Liberation. which supports Mitterrand, and opposed by Le Figaro, which opposes the president and most of the major cultural projects begun during his presidency.

But Chirac, one of Mitterrand's main political enemies, who also is mayor of Paris, was an early convert to the design. At the same time, Parisians love nothing better than a fight over some cultural proiect, and Pei's design encountered opposition from powerful nonpolitical quarters as well. The Louvre director, André Chabaud, resigned in 1983, saying the expansion plans were "unfeasible" and the pyramid contained "architectural risks."

Some officials in the Department of Historical Monuments complained that the pyramid would be "incongruous," and would destroy the harmony of a celebrated view stretching unobstructed from the mu-seum up the Champs Elysées to the Arc de Triomphe.

Michel Guy, who was culture minister in an earlier Chirac government in the mid-70s, organized the Association for Renovating the Louvre to oppose Pei's project. Under Pei's plan, he warned, the entrance would have a "concentration camp atmosphere." Two other architects, Pedro Ramirez Vasquez and Gerard Grandval, sub-mitted rival designs.

The outery recalled similar campaigns. When the Eiffel Tower was proposed 100 years ago it was opposed by many artists and cultural leaders - Emile Zola condenned it as "a pile of iron junk." A similar uproar occurred in the early 1970s, when President Georges Pompidou pushed the radical design of the museum that now bears his name. The two now attract more visitors than any other Paris monuments.

Pei said last week that he had only one regret about his idea now that it has taken shape. The pyramid, although made of specially composed glass, has proved less effective than he had hoped, partly because of the often dark Paris sky, but also because of the amount of dirt that settles on the work.

As a result, one of the first orders he gave on his latest arrival here was for a cleanup before Sunday's concert. Mountaineers spent a day negotiating the 51.7-degree glass slopes, mops in hand, to wash off urban grime and pigeon droppings.

Twyla Tharp to Join _ New York Dance Groun

Twyla Tharp will join American Ballet Theatre in New York as arustic associate, a position that will make her a resident choreographer with the company. Several members of Tharp's dance troupe will join Ballet Theatre in what Tharp-called a merger rather than a dissolution of her troupe. Mikhail Baryshnikov, Ballet Theatre's artistic director, said that Tharp would begin choreographing a new ballet in August for the 1988-89 season. Previous works by Tharp will be staged for Ballet Theatre for the first time over the next two years.

Jane Fonda has agreed to take part in a benefit to raise money to help children of Vietnam veterans born deformed because of Agent Orange, veterans supporting the actress announced. They said the benefit will be held July 29 in Wa. terbury, Connecticut, and will also be attended by Robert De Niru. who will co-star with Fonda in a movie to be filmed in the area later this summer.

Amid fanfare rivaling that of the Olympics and Super Bowl, the Cal-ifornia city of Beverly Hills gave itself a star-studded 75th birthday party capped with fireworks, ma-sic, and a diamond-encrusted cake valued at $20 million. "Happy Birthday, Beverly Hills." said the singer Dinah Shore, a 20-year resident who was master of ceremo-nies. The 90-minute show featured skits, music and dancing commenorating the city's history. More than 1,000 singers, dancers, actors and non-celebrity residents in called Beverly Hills's transform tion from a lima bean field to 5.6 acres of some of the world's most expensive property.

Edward Earl Haynes is a man of lew words. Two, to be exact. Haynes, the new mayor of Norwood, Louisiana, a village about 30 miles north of Baton Ronge, gave the shortest speech at inauguration day ceremonies. "Hi.
